England's Triumph,

In the Joyful Coronation of a Protestant Queen: Or, An Acrostick upon Anne, Queen of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, &c.

24 April. 1702.

*A*urora, the bright Usher of the Morn,
N or Sol, whose Splendor does the Day adorn,
N o such enlivening Influences can
E xtend to us, like those of Glorious ANNE;
Q ueen of our Isle, whose Power I plainly see,
u nto her Titles justly will agree.
E xalted on the Throne, her Vertues there
E ach in their Lustre do to us appear:
N o Clouds can now obstruct the gracious Smile
O f her bright Rayes, that lay obscure a while;
F rom thence her Graces send their Splendor down,
E xceeding all the Jewels in the Crown.
N o sparkling Gem set in that splendid Train
G ives such Delight as from Herself we gain.
L ike as the Sun, with his enlivening Fire,
A wakes the Dead, and gently does inspire
N ew Life and Soul to all that Winter's Cold
D id Mortifie, and in chill Prisons hold.
S o when Bright WILLIAM had withdrawn his Light,
C onverting Day into a Sable Night,
O ur drooping Souls then almost Dead with Fear,
T ook Life when ANNE's bright Lustre did appear.
L ight, Life, and Joy did Britain's Isle attend,
A s soon as she did to its Throne ascend.
N o sorowful or discontented Mind
D id Albion then within her Bosom find.
F rance, which most Men do Europe's Terror call,
R egains no Ground from the Great WILLIAM's Fall.
A Queen succeeds, which its proud Prince may find N o less a Curb to his Insulting Mind.
C onduct and Courage shall her Smiles obtain,
E ach from her Hand shall its just Merit gain.
A Female Champion with undaunted Breast
N ow Faces Him that EUROPE does Molest,
D eclaring that with utmost Vigour she
I ntirely with unchangable Decree,
R esolves the Scheme that our late Heroe drew
E xactly, and his Measures will pursue.
L ong may she Reign, and may Success attend
A ll her wise Councils for that glorious End:
N o End of Conquests may she know, till France
D oes own her Right, and she its Throne advance.
